Just pull them up!

We have been struggling with paper thorns in our school grounds, and this has led me to reflect upon the challenges that our children (and we ourselves) face in our lives. Here are some lessons I have learned whilst weeding:

- If weeds are left unattended, they will spread rapidly.
- The longer weeds are left to grow, the deeper their roots go, making them more difficult to remove.
- Initially, it may appear that there are not many weeds, but once you start weeding, you realise that there are many more than you first thought.

This allegory is applicable to the habits that our children (and we) develop, such as manners, work ethic, behaviour, and the way we treat others. It is far easier to address a problem early on than to wait until it has become insurmountable and perhaps even unfixable. Let us all do our part to weed the lives of our children (and ourselves).
