A Life of Purpose

How to future-proof our children has been on my heart for quite a while. Our children are facing diverse challenges: from the complexity and dangers of the digital world to the pervasive issue of substance abuse and the intense peer pressure associated with it. Additionally, navigating a world seemingly devoid of strong widely held values, where even fundamental concepts such as gender face constant renegotiation. Further compounding this is the sense of helplessness, fuelled by the constant barrage of news about global conflict and disasters.

I firmly believe that in order to ensure that our children stand firm, true to themselves and their beliefs, they need a strong sense of purpose, a sense of calling, and an unshakable belief that God has created each and every one of them for a special role.

At school, we are going to be working on this aspect but I would ask that you all spend time with your children and have conversations about their future: what they want to be; their dreams; their hopes and fears. This then, will be the starting point.
